THE LONG AND SHORT OF THE PRESIDEN-REPUBLICAN MOTTO FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

The Globe Reporters in Congress. | SAN'L OTT. [Correspondence of the Philadelphia Press.] WASHINGTON, June 8, 1860.

As you enter the gallery of the Senate and the House you will see before a flat white-marble desk a number of young men, whose pens move with a rapidity wonderful to behold. These are the regular rein short-hand all that is said by the Senators and Representatives, and write it out for the organ of the two Houses, the Daily Globe. The industry of these gentlemen is as remarkable as their genius and intel-They do not lose a word or a syllable that is spoken, and often put a decent dress upon some most ungrammatical and ungenteel expressions. Taking their places at eleven o'clock, they labor till the close of the session, which fremently consumes six, and yesterday and Wednesday lasted twenty-five hours .-Then, when the members retire to their residences, to dine and rest, the heavy labors of the reporters may be said really to begin. From the phonographic hieroglyphics they write out full reports for the Globe, and this often compels them to toil till long-after midnight .-Incredible as it may seem, they have each frequently reported and prepared for the press ten closely printed columns in a single day, and the four reporters in the House will hand over to Mr. Rives, of the Globe, to-day, ninety columns of this matter, being a full and detailed account of the long session which began on Wednesday at 11 A. M., and extended into Thursday at 12. How they bear up under this pressure it is difficult to explain; but they seem to be as bright and as healthy as any of the members whose wise saws and foolish speeches they send to the waiting world. Their pay is rather liberal, but they earn double what they get. That these faithful and hard working men should not be able to please everybody, is natural, but it is strange that any member should conceive it to be right to deprecate their labors, and even to declare that they are not accurate in their reports. And yet so it is. The Duily Globe is one of the marvels of the age, and though it contains frequently a vast amount of trash, it will be an invaluable compendium for the historian, and a monument of American legislation. It may be improved, but it ought never to be abandoned. Mr. Rives, the publisher, is coining vast sums out of his enterprise, which excites a deal of rivalry among those whose mouths are always watering for the plums of power, and he himself is getting over fond of these plums. But he has energy and experience, and I do not covet his fortune.

A Lady's Criticism of Walt Whitman. The following rather severe but entirely just remarks are by Juliesse H. Beach, of Albion, N. Y.

"LEAVES OF GRASS." The suspense is ended. The "Distinctve American Poem"-the only one (God be thanked) the country has yet produced -has appeared.

I am not at all squeamish. Not easily shocked either. I adore the beautiful, and grow impassioned as I drink in the voluptuous in art or poesy. Amorous poetry, so far from being to me offensive, is delightful, and the soft, liquid lines of tender love, and the deep strains of a burning passion, seem to me alike fit hymns to off-But Walt Whitman's poems are not amorous; they are only beastly. They express far more truthfully the feelings of brute nature than the sentiments of buman

Walt Whitman has done his work. He has shown to the world that one may have the form and presence of a man, and yet in those finer qualities which most intimately connect man with higher intelliences be utterly wanting, and level of the "beasts that perish." I doubt if, when the Judgement day comes. Walt Whiman's name will be called. He has certainly not soul enough to be saved. hardly think he has enough to be damined.
